Prevent Isolation and Loneliness As You Age

Connecting You to Community Services

Older adults who describe themselves as lonely have a 59 percent greater risk of functional decline and a 45 percent greater risk of death.

Introduction

As we age, circumstances in our lives often change. We retire from a job, friends move away or health issues convince us to eliminate or restrict driving. When changes like these occur, we may not fully realize how they will affect our ability to stay connected and engaged and how much they can impact our overall health and well-being.

We need social connection to thrive—no matter our age—but recent research shows that the negative health consequences of chronic isolation and loneliness may be especially harmful for older adults. The good news is that with greater awareness, we can take steps to maintain and strengthen our ties to family and friends, expand our social circles and become more involved in the community around us.

Having a social network that meets our needs means different things to each of us. We hope that the information and resources in this publication motivate you to evaluate your situation and, if needed, take action to strengthen the relationships that matter the most to you. And don't forget—when you open up your world to new people, sharing your time, talents and wisdom, it's a win-win for you and your entire community.

About 29 percent of people age 65-plus live alone and twice as many women live alone as men. Almost 50 percent of older women age 75-plus live alone.

What Steps Can You Take to Stay Connected and Engaged?

Sometimes it takes effort to stay connected. You may have noticed that your social engagements have decreased or that you have gone days or weeks without speaking to or interacting with others. It never hurts to take stock of your network of activities and friends and to evaluate what you can do to make more connections.

We have enclosed a simple Self-Assessment Checklist that will help you determine your level of risk of becoming socially isolated or lonely and whether you should take steps to expand your circles of connection and engagement.

Here are some actions you may want to consider taking to help you stay ahead of the “connection curve”:

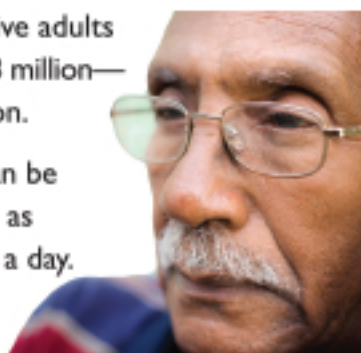

- Nurture and strengthen existing relationships: invite people over for coffee or call them to suggest a trip to a museum or to see a movie.
- Schedule a time each day to call a friend or visit someone.
- Meet your neighbors—young and old.
- Don't let being a non-driver stop you from staying active. Find out about your transportation options.
- Use social media like Facebook to stay in touch with long-distance friends or write an old-fashioned letter.
- Stay physically active and include group exercise in the mix, like joining a walking club.
- Take a class to learn something new and, at the same time, expand your circle of friends.
- Revisit an old hobby you've set aside and connect with others who share your interests.
- Volunteer to deepen your sense of purpose and help others.
- Visit your local community wellness or senior center and become involved in a wide range of interesting programs.
- Check out faith-based organizations for spiritual engagement, as well as to participate in activities and events.
- Get involved in your community by taking on a cause, such as making your community more age-friendly.

How Widespread Is the Problem of Social Isolation?

- An estimated one in five adults over age 50—at least 8 million—are affected by isolation.
- Prolonged isolation can be as bad for your health as smoking 15 cigarettes a day.

What Are the Factors That Put You At Greater Risk?

- Living alone*
- Mobility or sensory impairment*
- Major life transitions or losses*
- Low income or limited financial resources
- Being a caregiver for someone with a serious condition
- Psychological or cognitive challenges
- Inadequate social support
- Rural, unsafe and/or inaccessible neighborhood
- Transportation access challenges
- Language barriers
- Age, racial, ethnic, sexual orientation and/or gender identity barriers

Caregivers: These risk factors may also provide you with clues to what to look for should you have a family member or neighbor who is isolated or lonely.

If You Are Isolated and Lonely Now, What Can You Do?

If you feel you are currently socially isolated and grappling with chronic loneliness, reach out to your family, friends and neighbors. Explore the resources described in this brochure to connect with others. There are lots of opportunities for you to get engaged in activities you will like, with people you will enjoy.

In addition, you may want to visit your primary physician and explain how you feel. Recognizing that you feel isolated or that you’re having trouble maintaining a social network that meets your needs is the first step to improving your quality of life.

National Resources

The following national resources can provide a comprehensive level of support for older adults, including the homebound, who are struggling with isolation and loneliness.

AREA AGENCIES ON AGING

Area Agencies on Aging (AAA) serve older adults in virtually every community in America and so chances are, there is one near you. AAAs provide a welcoming environment for older adults and caregivers interested in participating in social and health promotion activities, as well as a range of services such as meals, transportation and in-home services.

To learn more about the AAA in your area, call the Eldercare Locator at 800.677.1116 or visit www.eldercare.gov to get connected today.

ELDERCARE LOCATOR

The Eldercare Locator is the only national information and referral resource to provide support to consumers seeking assistance across the spectrum of issues affecting older Americans. Through its National Call Center (800.677.1116), which operates five days a week from 9:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. ET, and website (www.eldercare.gov), the Locator serves as a trusted gateway for older adults and caregivers searching for information and resources which can be crucial to their health, well-being and independence.

CONNECT2AFFECT

Connect2Affect is an online resource featuring tools and information to help evaluate isolation risk, reach out to others who may be feeling lonely and disengaged, and find practical ways to reconnect to community. It is for individuals, families and the community at large. Learn more at connect2affect.org.
